OLD JO LANE. An Indinapolis correspondent of the Cincinnati Enquirer writes a long letter, embracing among other matters an interview between the writer and Mr. Matt Brown, one of the Oregon delegates to the St Louis Convention, in which a once promunent public man of the United States is mentioned:

"But the most notable object of inhis eyes gleaming with devotional there are thousands of people in this country familiar with his name and record who would swear he was dead, and the young politicians of the present generation manage to get along without men ioning him at all, which is very remarkable, I sometimes think, Club numbers over 200. considering what a conspicuous figure he was in American politics twenty years ago. Indiana idotized him. No came West in 1856, was appointed of a bolt." Provisional Governor of Oregon by Filmore, then was in the Senate, and had just finished his term when the Charleston convention recognized his radical pro-slavery opinions by placing him on the ticket with Breckinridge. After that defeat he came back to us in disgust, and the hot political places that once knew him will know him no more forever. HOT AND WARM SPRINGS HOTEL, MADISON COUNTY, N. C., July 29th, 1876.

Dear Journal: I do not remember ever to have seen a description of the country hereabouts, and only a bare allusion to this one of North Carolina's many jewels, her hot and warm springs.

Not feeling competent with my limited time to go into a thorough description of the surroundings, I propose to offer only my first impressions which may or may not be strictly correct. The country appears mixed up and tangled in a wonderful manner; will hear the usual report from this, the mountains and valleys, rivers and plains are twisted together in the most fantastic and yet harmonious confusion (if I may be allowed the expression); so much so that there appears no fixed point of the compass; the sun rises just where it pleases, and it pleases to rise anywhere except in the east. The hotel fronts nowhere ex rich and interesting portion of our cept the river and is placed exactly crosswise the world.
